I am now a multi-millionaire, and I have never had my own business, invented anything or inherited one red cent. What I have always done is paid myself first. Especially in your twenties, max out your retirement deductions, or at the minimum put in an amount that maxes out your company match. The money I contributed in my twenties now accounts for of my net worth, even though I contributed much more each year in my thirties and later. Such is the power of compound earnings!

In your younger years, invest in a S&P 500 index fund. The fees are low, and a few investors can beat their average return.
