NEW HAMPSHIRE SPORTS BETTING LAWS

While several states are able to offer licenses to a number of operators through a network of casinos, New Hampshire has no casinos to speak of.

While the priority of many lawmakers was to simply get sports betting legalized in the state, some within the state legislature attempted to use sports betting bills to legalize traditional casinos in New Hampshire as well.

College sports are also up for grabs for New Hampshire sports bettors.

Bettors can wager on college football and basketball games throughout each seas on, with the College Football Playoff and NCAA Tournament serving as the most wa gered on events in each of those sports.

Of course, those looking to place more conventional wagers can do so as well.

In-game wagering is also something that bettors in New Hampshire can take advant age of when they are betting online.

This form of betting is growing in popularity, as bettors can wager on games th at have already started, with odds that regularly update based on what is happen ing in that game to that point.

If you&#39;re starting the football season with a $500 bankroll, your biggest b et should be $25.

End of story.

You don&#39;t want to be laying -7 with the Cowboys if they&#39;re available at

-6 at another book.

Take your 15 bucks on the favorite.

For example, sportsbooks may limit some customers to betting $5,000 on a colleg e football over/under total, while they may take $20,000 on the point spread of the same game.

What bookmakers really want is to manage their action in a way that leaves them rooting for the same side as the bettors they most respect.

¢ Myth: I know a lot about football, so I will be able to pick winners

Respect the market, and realize that most of the information you learn is alrea dy factored into the odds.
