What is a Facebook girlfriend?

As the name suggests, a Facebook girlfriend is someone who conducts a relationship with a significant other entirely via the internet. However, unlike traditional online dating, the whole idea is to keep the relationship purely virtual, without the promise of ever meeting in person.

Here's a quote from a working online girlfriend:

"My job is to provide my clients with all of the resources I have to offer.

This could be help with emotional issues, personal problems, developing social skills, practice flirting, or just be a plain friend/girlfriend. I even post on my clients social media walls, if requested, for no extra charge," a woman who calls herself Hayley recently shared on Reddit.

This also ensures that she is being completely transparent with her clients and that they know she's a real woman and not some sort of bot created for phishing.

She says, "I am paid by PayPal, and I charge just for phone calls, or chatting.

Some of them have embarrassing thoughts or stuff they just want to get off their chest. While others are going through tough times,"

"I'd get the story of how we met and the last 10 messages we'd exchanged. This setup is designed to create the illusion of continuity; ideally, an life, instead of what it really is: a rotating cast of men and women,"

she explains.

She requires first time clients to pay upfront to ensure that she doesn't lose out.

All payments go through PayPal. Hayley also mentions that she juggles up to seven (but no more) clients at a time, which makes for a solid monthly income.
