To better understand how fake reviews affect consumer mindset and behavior, we surveyed 10,000 global shoppers. Here's what we learned.

48% leave a negative review

16% will post [negatively] about the brand on social media

Our survey also asked what an appropriate level of punishment for brands in breach of these standards would be and 27% of respondents suggested a fine of almost 30% of the brand's revenue.

This is up from a suggested 16% fine when we last ran this survey (in 2020) - evidently consumers feel that this violation of trust warrants an increasingly significant consequences for brands.

At Bazaarvoice, we have three golden rules when it comes to how companies should protect consumer trust in reviews:

1. Don't screen out negative content - find value in it. 71% of our survey respondents said that negative reviews are as important as positive reviews in their purchasing decisions. The majority claimed that negative reviews contain more detailed info on product pros and cons, while 54% think that they're less likely to be fraudulent. Negative reviews are also an opportunity for engaging with consumers and identifying potential product improvements. We have endless stories from clients that have used the feedback from their customer reviews to help inform all parts of their businesses. Brands who respond to negative feedback will build trust and loyalty with their customers

2. Even better, there is just a 4x rollover requirement, and it can be claimed with a deposit as low as $20 on the card, or just $10 with crypto! This makes it a great option for both casual and experienced football bettors alike.

This bonus may not be as large as some of the other high-value competitor bonuses, but it can be claimed with just a 10x rollover.
